What's New In Free System Cleaner?

Before the first use, make sure you have the Free system cleaner installed. The application performs a quick scan and categorizes files according to their importance, saving them in order to provide you with a complete overview of what's taking up your disk space. The program also makes it easy for you to remove unneeded files and has a friendly user interface. After the scanning is over, you can use the on-screen or the integrated utility to quickly view and remove from your computer files that are taking up space but are still present on your hard disk. Files are found by their size or by their content, and by default the whole registry is scanned. In addition, you can select a specific folder to be scanned as well as optionally only unimportant files. System Requirements: Minimum Windows XP (SP2 or later) Recommended Windows Vista or later Storage: 2 GB free space on your hard disk Additional Notes: If you wish, you can transfer the created report to a PC that is linked to the Internet and share the results with your friends and family. Cleaning up the disk space frees up valuable hard disk space, reduces the size of programs that are currently installed on your computer, and improves its speed and performance. Removes only unimportant files Removes only unimportant files Removes only unimportant files Removes only unimportant files Find, List & Clean Files Overview Before you start using the System Cleaner, you should make sure you have removed any temporary files that are no longer required. Some temporary files are generated by programs that you are using, some are created by the system, and some are created by extensions that are not needed. For example, the Windows Save As dialog box contains temporary files that are used to complete the action you are performing. To find out whether a file is temporary or not, open the Windows File Explorer and select the Search option. Enter temp, the folder where temporary files are located, in the File Name field. When you find a file that you suspect to be temporary, right-click on it and select Delete.
